group of Big Ten Networks guests will participate in an exclusive Q&A with the Big Ten Network. One of these guests will be Illinois State Senator James Meeks, who was at the meeting and discussion at the White House. He is also one of five Illinois state legislators that went to the White House the same day as the university.

Meeks is a member of the Illinois delegation to the National Association of Basketball Coaches, and he is the Illinois Teacher of the Year. He is also part of an Illinois delegation that has been in the White House to discuss issues regarding higher education and academics. Meeks says he and the other four members of the Illinois delegation to the White House felt privileged to be asked to speak with the President. "For a group of men who are predominantly African American and predominantly male, from a state which has the lowest level of African American college-graduation rates, for us to have an in-depth conversation with the president of our country was significant," says Meeks. The delegation was able to personally share their thoughts about the path to higher education and how African Americans might be able to solve the problems facing their education system. "The educational challenges facing the Illinois public schools were a primary concern for him," says Meeks. Meeks says the discussion was not one-sided. "The issues have been that African American students are under-represented in most institutions of higher education," says Meeks. "We're very, very proud of our graduates. They
